The strategy seeks to provide total returns by taking advantage of pricing inefficiencies often found in the private fixed income market. The strategy employs a top-down investment approach to create an overall target risk profile for the strategy. The top-down view incorporates macroeconomic and interest rate forecasts from our rates research group to determine the optimal duration and curve positioning. Private fixed income holdings that are consistent with portfolio objectives and constraints, are sourced by the private fixed income team and serve as core asset holdings for the strategy. Public fixed income holdings are utilized primarily to complement these core holdings such that overall portfolio characteristics are consistent with the intended risk profile. All subscriptions and redemptions cash flows happen at month-end. Returns presented are gross of Investment Management fees and net of operating expenses. The internal dispersion measure is the asset-weighted standard deviation of accounts in the Composite and is calculated only for Composite with 6 or more portfolios with full year returns. The three-year annualized standard deviation is not applicable to the composite, as it measures the variability of the composite return and the benchmark returns over the preceding 36-month period.
